Teachers meet to discuss the achievement of their English Language Learners. Developmental Reading Assessment (DRA) scores are frequently sited to report reading ability. Some teachers refer ESL students for special education services using DRA scores as supporting evidence; yet, no mention of base or ceiling levels of comprehension is considered, resulting is questionable records and less than adequate instructional plans for individual ESL students. The purpose of this research project was to analyze the adequacy of DRAs to measure reading levels of (ESL)

students. Related topics included oral reading fluency, comprehension, models of reading, assessment, and reading in a second language. Case studies of ESL students given DRAs are examined. Implications and recommendations based on results are provided for mainstream and ESL teachers. The intent is that they use this knowledge to make appropriate instructional decisions for their students.

Students in the Georgia school under study must pass the Developmental Reading Assessment (DRA) and reading portion of the Criterion Referenced Competency Test (CRCT) to be promoted to the next grade. Therefore, there should be a strong positive correlation between the scores of the two tests since the DRA is used as an indicator of student reading progress prior to taking the CRCT. The purpose of this study was to determine if there was a positive correlation between the DRA reading scores and CRCT total reading scores for first-grade students

This ex post facto, participatory action research study investigated the relationship between a criterion-referenced, inventory-based reading assessment and the standardized Third Grade Reading Ohio Achievement Assessment (OAA). The study, conducted in a suburban Ohio district where the Developmental Reading Assessment (DRA) has been used since 1998, was framed by Scriven's (1967) distinction between formative and summative evaluations of educational programs. Scores from a sample population of 2,395 students in 83 third grade classrooms for school years ending in 2008 through 2010 for the DRA in the spring of both second and third grades and the Reading OAA in the spring of third grade were examined. Bridging the gap between formative and summative assessments was explored to understand the effectiveness of the DRA as a predictive instrument and to determine whether it is differentially-related to students categorized as below, at, or above grade level on the DRA. The correlation and regression analyses of test scores revealed that both the second and third grade DRA scores were strong predictors of the Third Grade OAA raw scores, and each was a better predictor for students below grade level than for those at or above grade level. The results of the study suggest using the DRA as part of a formative feedback process at the end of second grade to identify students who may be at risk of failing the spring Third Grade Reading OAA in order to provide intervention.

The Adequacy of Developmental Reading Assessment (DRA) Scores to Measure Reading Ability of English as a Second Language (ESL) Students

Modern Curriculum Press "The present study investigated the relationship between Dynamic Indicators of Basic Early Literacy Skills (DIBELS) Oral Reading Fluency and the Developmental Reading Assessment (DRA) as related to the TerraNova 2nd Edition Vocabulary and Comprehension. Historical test data gained from 46 third grade participants during 2004-2005 school year from an urban elementary school was utilized. The DRA protocols were coded and correlations were run to determine the relationship between the three tests. Significant correlations were found consistently between the DIBELS scores with DRA Phrasing and Fluency and DRA Story Level. Of particular interest, the overall best predictor for DIBELS scores was the DRA Story Level. Significant correlations were also found between DIBELS scores, DRA scores, and TerraNova 2nd Edition Comprehension and Vocabulary. The best predictor for both the TerraNova 2nd Edition Vocabulary and Comprehension scores was the fall DRA Story Level"--Abstract.
